Introduction Patients with pressure ulcers are vulnerable to falls and worsening of their condition. The aim of this study was to determine the impact of pressure ulcer development on the health of the patient and caregiver. Materials and methods A prospective, descriptive, and cross-sectional design with a convenience sampling procedure was used. A questionnaire, the Pressure Sore Care Assessment Tool (PSCAT), was designed to identify variables that could affect pressure ulcer development and severity. The PSCAT was applied to patients with confirmed stages 2-4 pressure ulcers and to the health caregivers of such patients who did not have pressure ulcers. The results were compared. Results PSCAT analysis was performed on 102 patients and 82 caregivers. Pressure ulcer development occurred in 96 (95%) patients; median age was 84.6 years (59-96). The PSCAT results showed an impact on the health of patients and caregivers in the following areas: physical functioning, mental health, pain and discomfort, happiness, and relationships with others. Caregiver health was affected primarily in terms of pain and mental health. The results of the PSCAT were statistically significant (pQ: If Sf: A  $\rightarrow$  BS is a closed surjection with closed SAS, then Sf<sup>-1</sup>(-1)(p)§ is closed in SAS Here is exercise 14.1 of Munkres. Let Sf: A  $\rightarrow$  BS be a closed surjection and suppose that SAS is compact Hausdorff. If Sp  $\rightarrow$  BS, then prove that Sf<sup>-1</sup>(-1)(p)§ is closed in SAS.
