Rival mob boss Giovanni Scarpelli was so scared of a hitman-for-hire called Shaka 12 months ago that he agreed to a deal with New York's FBI to supply the bureau with his drug connections in exchange for protection. The agent was greeted with a nervous stare when he visited the boss of Italian organized crime in the city, but he won his trust by telling the man, who was released from prison less than a week earlier, that he knew the underworld already. Things are not going so well for the man called Shaka today. Under the terms of his deal with the government, the hitman-for-hire is supposed to kill Scarpelli's nemesis, a former drug dealer who is now driving up the Mob's income stream. And when a high-powered
