Mobile TCP is the world's first mobile TCP utility. Mobile TCP supports changing IP address or External IP and checks your network connection, including checking if you are being throttled or restricted, and connects you to SMTP servers. Mobile TCP works quietly, as it hides in the system tray, which is very friendly. Mobile TCP uses the same proxy settings as the web browser. Mobile TCP has a transparent interface, and each of the functions has a menu bar and there is no nag screens, unwanted requesters, or irritating sounds. Mobile TCP takes a note of the states of all networks you are connected to, so you can easily check if you are being throttled or restricted. You can also choose to ignore this state. Mobile TCP can also detect that you are at work and automatically select a SMTP server specifically designed for corporate use. The availability of network connection, checking if you are being throttled or restricted, and switching to a SMTP server are all handled by a single application. Even though you are connected to an unencrypted network, Mobile TCP still checks if your computer is not being restricted by a policy at the network manager's site. Mobile TCP currently has the ability to select and send e-mail messages to yourself. You can use Mobile TCP to search through your e-mails on the POP3 server at work. Mobile TCP is hard to copy, and because it uses the same proxy settings as the web browser, any SMTP server you connect to will use the same proxy settings as the web browser.
